5 marketing mistakes costing you customers.

And the simple fix for each. A 10-minute read for owners who get attention but want more of it to turn into sales.

Attention is cheap. Customers aren't.

Most businesses we talk to aren't short of attention. They post, they boost, they get views. What's missing is the path from that attention to a sale.

These are the five leaks we find most often in our free audits. None of them needs a big budget to fix. Go through each one, tick the boxes that are true for you, and start with the section where you ticked the fewest.

HOW TO USE THIS

Read one mistake a day. Fix it before moving on. In a week you'll have plugged the biggest leaks in your marketing.

01

You count likes, not customers.

Why it costs you: Likes and views feel like progress, but they don't pay the rent. If your reports stop at reach, you can't tell which posts or ads actually brought people in.

THE FIX

Pick one number that pays: sales, bookings, calls or messages. Track it every week next to your spend.

QUICK CHECK

- ☐ I know how many customers came from social last month.
- ☐ I know what one customer costs me in ads.

YOUR NOTES

02

You boost posts instead of running ads.

Why it costs you: The boost button shows a post to more people. A proper ad shows a specific offer to people likely to buy, and tells you what it cost to get each one.

THE FIX

Move your budget into Ads Manager (or Google Ads) with one clear offer, one audience and conversion tracking switched on.

QUICK CHECK

- ☐ My ads are set up in Ads Manager, not boosted.
- ☐ Tracking records sales or leads, not just clicks.

03

Your content doesn't stop the scroll.

Why it costs you: People decide in under two seconds. Generic stock photos, long captions and busy designs get scrolled past, no matter how good the offer is.

THE FIX

Lead with one bold line and one real image: your product, your people, your result. Say one thing per post.

QUICK CHECK

- ☐ My first line would make a stranger stop.
- ☐ My posts show real people or products, not stock.

YOUR NOTES

04

Nobody knows what to do next.

Why it costs you: Attention with no next step leaks away. If the call to action is vague (“DM for info”, “link in bio” with no reason), most people just leave.

THE FIX

Give every post, page and ad one clear action that says what happens: “Book a free fitting”, “Get 10% off your first order”.

QUICK CHECK

- ☐ Every post has one specific call to action.
- ☐ The link in my bio goes straight to that action.

YOUR NOTES

05

You're invisible when people search.

Why it costs you: People who search for what you sell are the warmest customers there are. If you don't show up on Google or Maps, they buy from whoever does.

THE FIX

Claim and complete your Google Business Profile, ask happy customers for reviews, and make sure your site says clearly what you sell and where.

QUICK CHECK

- ☐ I show up when I search for my service.
- ☐ I've had a new Google review this month.
